

WALL COSTS

EXPLANATION

This section is not a part of the Segregated Cost Method. It is presented here to provide a detailed cost buildup where it is felt that a specific wall being valued varies significantly from the typical walls on the Segregated Cost pages or where such detail is demanded. The costs in this section differ from the Segregated Costs of Sections SEG 1 through SEG 6 in that each individual wall component is priced separately, while the segregated wall costs include, in the one cost, an allowance for each of the following components:

- 1. BASIC WALL
- 2. EXTERIOR COVER
- 3. INTERIOR FACING
- 4. FINISH (exterior and interior)
- 5. OPENINGS (windows and doors)

Some walls will be made up of many component parts, while others may have only two or three. The examples, on the next page, illustrate the method to use in building up a total wall cost. The costs are given per square foot of actual area of the various components except as otherwise stated. Thus, if any component, such as windows or doors, does not occupy the total wall area, the unit price should be multiplied by the proportion of the area of the component to the total wall area. Costs include full allowance for the general contractor's overhead and profit. However, the architect's fee must be added.

Wall costs are the sum of the costs of all their parts. Basic wall costs for wood frame, brick, stone, etc., and for wall coverings such as face brick, wood shingles, and many others, are priced for the entire wall area regardless of the number and size of openings. To these costs are added the unit costs for windows and doors. These unit costs are applied in the proportion the windows and doors bear to the entire wall area.

This principle is demonstrated in the examples. In Example 1, for instance, where 10% of the total wall area consists of windows, 10% of the unit cost for windows is applied to the total wall area. There are exceptions to the above rule. For instance, in the building elevation illustrated in Figure A, the basic wall cost would be applied only to the lower half of the wall which is shown and the window costs applied to the upper half.

FIGURE B

Between this type of wall and the completely blank wall, there is a complete chain of gradations, which leaves much to the experience and judgment of the assessor.

Figure B shows the front elevation of a typical industrial building, where the basic wall costs are applied to the entire wall and the cost of the windows and door is applied to the actual area of the openings.

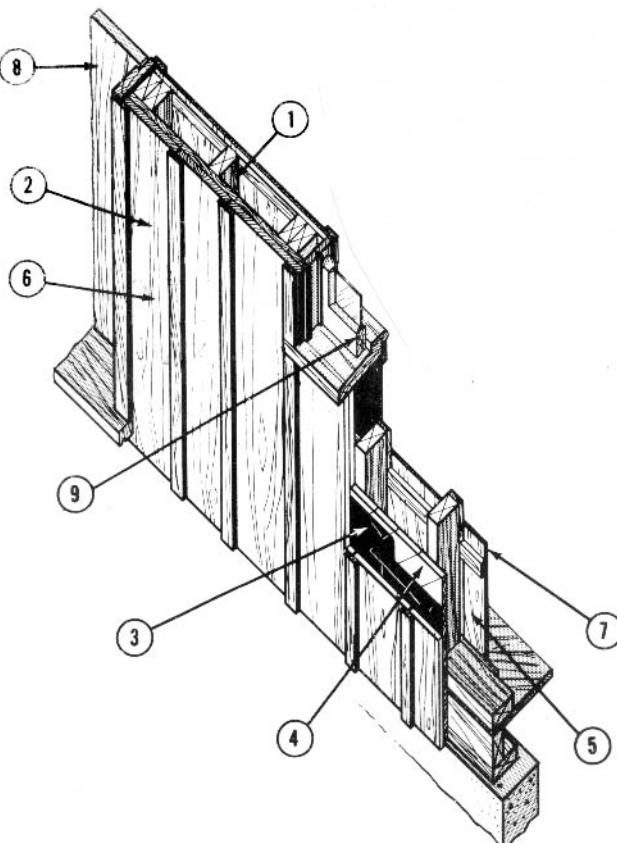

This so-called doubling of areas for computation, as in Figure B, provides an allowance for the added cost of building the wall around openings.

This section can also be used to test the proper rating choice in the Segregated Cost section. For example, the assessor may encounter a wall which is not typical either in the number of openings, type of interior finish, or some other feature. He may profitably build up the cost of that particular wall in detail and not only use the cost for that particular appraisal, but also could use it as a guide in choosing the proper rating number in the Segregated Costs when a similar wall is encountered in the future.

It is sometimes desirable to build up the cost of interior partitions instead of pricing them on a square foot basis. Some of the component parts for interior construction may be priced from this section; however, interior doors and built-in cabinets should be priced from Section UIP 2.
